SHE IS PERSECUTED

The Strange Case of Mrs.
Dominick Enderlitz.

ABDUCTED WHEN AN INFANT.

Taken to Switzerland and Put in Care of Cruel Parents.

Money Sent From New York for Her Support—Told She Was the Daughter of a Wealthy American—Married, and Determined to Seek Her Parents—Her Efforts Being Persecuted Upon Her and Frequent Attempts are Made to Steal Her Children—A Romantic and Mysterious Story.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—A romantic story of the alleged abduction of a child of supposedly wealthy New Yorkers, of her isolation in a lonely spot in the wild mountains of Switzerland, of her subsequent escape from her cruel keepers, of her return to this city and persecution here by mysterious personages, came to light yesterday, through the following advertisement which appeared in one of the local German newspapers:

A LADY WHO WAS ABDUCTED WHEN a child, about 35 years ago, from New York City or vicinity, and taken to Switzerland, seeks her parents. Information may be obtained from Mrs. Enderlitz, No. 409 East 12th St.

A reporter found Mrs. Enderlitz in a small, neatly kept room on the second floor at that number, with two pretty, dark-eyed and swarthy looking children tugging at her skirts and gazing at the intruder with awed astonishment.

Mrs. Enderlitz said that she was the heroine of the story vaguely revealed in the advertisement, and then narrated her romantic history as she had gathered it together and there by bits and woven into a coherent and plausible whole.

She says that she has a vague rememberance of having been carried away from her parents by strangers and taken across a wide expanse of restless waters.
She was a child, at the time, perhaps 3 years of age. When she had grown up so that she could appreciate her surroundings she found herself in the hands of cruel and rough peasants away down in the hills of an isolated mountain in Switzerland. The nearest village was about five miles off, and could be reached only by a primitive, dangerous path along a steep mountain peak. Thither the young girl had often to wander in winter time through deep snows with a basket full of butter and eggs to take to a merchant.

While on these errands she picked up from the villagers now and then slender threads relating to her sudden and mysterious appearance in the household of her keeper and of occasional visits to the village of a well-dressed foreigner, supposedly an American, who would hold conferences with her mountain keeper and give him money. It was common gossip among the villagers that the Durr (that was the supposed name of her supposed parents) were not her parents at all, as they had given out to the village pastor when he was called upon to christen her Annie. Besides this, Annie heard snatches of conversation now and then regarding her and the money that the foreign gentleman was sending at intervals from New York and other points in the vicinity for keeping Annie.

There came a time when this board money ceased to come and the peasants' treatment of Annie became more and more cruel. One day Durr told her that he would not keep her any longer, and came out with the story that she was the daughter of some wealthy American.
Annie was 15 years old when she left her bondage and started out in the world with the hope of finding her real parents.

She worked for a while in hotels where American tourists sojourn, hoping against hope that she might learn something of her parents through them.
About ten years ago she met an honest, industrious young man under the name of Dominick Enderlitz who was ambitious to pursue his luck in "the promised land" of America. Annie encouraged Dominick's attention to her and eventually accepted his offer of marriage.

They came to this city, but lack of money prevented Mrs. Enderlitz from at once instituting the search for her supposedly wealthy parents. About two years ago she inserted the first adver-sement in a newspaper.

To the amazement of the honest couple, instead of getting an inkling of the identity and whereabouts of the sought-for parents, they found themselves persecuted by mysterious persons who seemed to be intent upon stealing one of their pretty, dark-eyed children.

Late one evening, upon leaving the Atlantic Garden on the Battery, where they had gone with their two children to spend a pleasant evening, Mrs. Enderlitz found herself followed by a well-dressed, closely veiled woman. Her husband was a few paces ahead of her, carrying the younger of the two children, when the veiled woman rushed silently up to her and tried to snatch from her little Annie, who was walking at her side, holding her hand. After that similar attempts to steal one of the children were made several times at their home.

Mrs. Enderlitz, in her despair finally went to Inspector Byrnes for protection.
The Inspector advised her to move and never to allow her children to run around in the street. The advice was implicitly followed.

Mrs. Enderlitz believes that these attempts to abduct one of her children have some mysterious relation to her efforts in finding her parents, but she fondly entertains the vague hope that she will be in the end successful, and that a big fortune will yet come to her.
She tells her romantic story in an intelligent, coherent and thoroughly plausible fashion. Neighbors corroborate the story of the attempted abduction of her children, and fully believe in Mrs. Enderlitz's other tale of her own abduction.

A HERMIT'S ROMANCE.

On Her Death Bed a Recluse Reveals Her Life's Secret.

LYNCOX, Mass., Oct. 15.—Katherine Kelley, Lincoln's old hermit, is dying, and yesterday she told the secret of her life. She was born in New Orleans in 1839, and in the years before the war she was the belle of the city. Her father's name was Samuel F. Gibbons. At the age of 18 she met a young man named Hiram Kelley, and clandestinely married him. The couple went to New York.
Hiram was unfortunate in business ventures and went to sea. The ship was wrecked, and all but Hiram and one other were lost.

Among the wreckage that drifted ashore was a large box of gold. They saved this, and in 1850 reached New York again. At the beginning of the war Kelley enlisted and sailed under Admiral Farragut. He was killed in the bombardment of New Orleans. His wife returned to her native city after the war, but found her family almost blotted out of existence. She then returned North, came to this town, and has since lived a hermit's life.

She has requested that the trunk and its contents be sent to her brother, Samuel F. Gibbons, Jr., in New Orleans.
Because of her miserly habits it is believed it contains a goodly share of the $125,000 which she claims she possessed at the close of the war.

THEY HAD SOLD OUT.

Hoey & Spooner Now Own No Stock in the Adams Express Co.

New York, Oct. 15.—President Sanford and Vice-President Lovejoy and most of the directors of the Adams Express Company are making a thorough investigation into the company's affairs. They will be unable to tell exactly how matters stand for several days to come. Examination thus far, it is said, has revealed irregularities, though to no great extent.

Mr. Lovejoy says that misappropria-tions, other than those already known, have been found. He refused to give any information as to their extent, but says there is no telling what the future will develop, and it will be some time next week before it can be told how much the ex-president has taken from the company.

Mr. Lovejoy says that, though the company is out a large amount of money, it will in no way affect the value of the company's stock.

Mr. Sanford says: "There is no facilitation on the part of the directors to relax any effort in prosecuting to the extent of the law, for the malfeasance against this company by its officers, and in securing all that has been wrongfully taken by these officers."

He refuses to say whether Messrs.
Hoey and Spooner will be arrested but says it will be left to the counsel of the company to take the most effective means of securing the misappropriated funds.

It was learned last yesterday that John Hoey, the deposed President, had sold out every dollar worth of his stock in the corporation just before the Boston Dispatch and Kingsley Express negotiations.
Chapp Spooner, the ex-Vice-President, also disposed of his holdings at the same time.

The investigating committee and the friends of the deposed officials were thunderstruck at this discovery, and much unfavorable comment is heard because the men retained their positions of trust and drew salary long after their other financial interest in the company had ceased. It is said that Mr. Hoey will shortly make a statement that will explain his side of the case.

FATAL BOILER EXPLOSION.

An Old Engine, Repair Shop at St.
Louis, Mo., Exploded Yesterday.

It was well known to need repair shortly before a dispatch from St. Louis, a terrible explosion resulted in the shop of the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railroad Company at South Park.

The employees in the shops had been repeating an old engine, and having completed the work, decided to test the boiler. Doubtless, too much steam was put on, for the boiler exploded with terrible effect.

Eleven persons were injured, three of them fatally. Five of the victims were terribly mutilated.

The three who are badly injured are John Clowry, Charles Newman and John May.

done in compliance with the dying request of the dead wheelman.

Capt. Blazer on Trial.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Oct. 15.—Captain Herman Blazer, who shot and killed during a quarrel between Blazer and a neighbor, and was hit by a bullet intended for the other man. Owing to the prisoner's ill health the trial was adjourned till January.

BEST SHOE IN THE WORLD?

It is the question which every man who is willing to buy a shoe, will ask himself. The answer is, "Because it is the best shoe in the world." It is the shoe which is made of the best material, and is made in the best way.
It is the shoe which is made for the foot, and not for the fashion. It is the shoe which is made to last, and not to be worn out in a few days. It is the shoe which is made for the man who wants a shoe which will serve him for years, and not for a few months. It is the shoe which is made for the man who wants a shoe which will cost him as little as possible, and yet be the best shoe in the world. It is the shoe which is made for the man who wants a shoe which will be the best shoe in the world.
